Actually, no. Belafonte covered it five times, but it was originally performed by Lord Intruder as "Jumbie Jamberee." The first US recording was the Mighty Charmers and King Flash, which is the soundtrack to the first one I linked, unless I got my versions confused.

The Kingston Trio version is from 1959. The first Belafonte version was in 1962.

Here's a better copy of Belafonte:

NOOOO! I am broken and humiliated!

Jumbie is the jamaican word for Zombie type entities; Duppy is their word for ghost.

Both of which I'm pretty dam' sure you knew already. (Going to soak mah pointy head in a bucket of cold water now...)

It teaches me humility. And simple correction isn't condemnation. (I hate to know bad data. basically, i simply assumed* that he'd done it first.)

*There's that word! And we all know what IT does!

Wow, Rockapella is apparently alive and well even though the line up is different from their Carmen Sandiego days.

Hope you are doing something fun tonight.

(P.S.: Happy Birthday!)

Dude, I totally thought about it being your birthday Sunday- but I was in the midst of watching a fire troupe while waiting for a favorite band to come onstage. So I had plenty of birthday well-wishing but not so much 'net access.

Happy birthday!
